Identification badges insignia, company jewellery and gifts

As a leading maker of the traditional enamel-on-metal badge since the 1920s, Thomas Fattorini was quick to recognise the usefulness of lightweight plastics for personal identification badges. The first in the UK to engrave names by computer, Fattorini can now handle badges for large numbers of staff at short notice, quickly and efficiently. The range of badge types is so large that virtually any requirement can be met. ID cardholders can also be supplied with printed or engraved headings.

The enamelled badge retains its place through its beauty and its permanence. Uniform badges, brooches, buttons and buckles are made; jewellery bearing the logo may also be given or sold to customers, as part of a range of items which cost-effectively promote the company image through quality and permanence.

Thomas Fattorini offers expert advisory services and can supply designs and estimates for consideration, without obligation.
